Also known as rolled ice cream, it is made by pouring a sweet cream-based mixture onto an extremely cold metal surface. The liquid quickly freezes and then is scraped off in a roll.
Paletas from Mexico

These stick novelties are typically sold by street vendors and can be fruity/juice based or made with milk/cream. Sometimes they contain heat, too. Chongos zamoranos, a Mexican dessert made with curdled milk, cinnamon and sugar, can be formed into paletas.

Boba are flavored, chewy tapioca balls most often used in bubble tea.
Kulfi from India

This dense ice cream is made by cooking milk until it reduces or by using condensed or evaporated milk. Typical flavors are cardamom, mango, pistachio and saffron. The traditional form is as a stick novelty served as street food.
Jipangyi, or J-cones, are cane-shaped, puffed corn or rice shells that get filled with one or two flavors of soft ice cream, with some sticking out at both ends. The ends are sometimes dipped in confections.
“Russian” ice cream means high standards, simplicity, minimally processed, organic and natural ingredients of the highest quality and richness of taste, while following the strict quality standards of Soviet government mandate GOST 117-41.

Hokey Pokey from New Zealand

Hokey Pokey is the kiwi word for honeycomb toffee. It’s blended into vanilla ice cream.
A Graeter’s Bonus Flavor this year was Hot Honey Crunch, which was made with crunchy honeycomb and sweet icing pieces combined with a little heat from hot honey.
Dondurma from Turkey

Low in fat with a dense structure, dondurma has a slightly stretchy, chewy texture that melts slowly. This helps the consumer savor the flavors a bit longer. In fact, it is often consumed sliced with a knife and fork. The secret is in the thickening agent.
Ais Kacang from Malaysia

Translated to bean ice, Ais Kacang is shaved ice topped with cooked red beans, fruits, syrups and condensed or evaporated milk.
Halva is a Middle Eastern sweet confection made with sesame, honey and nuts. It gets generously mixed into ice cream for a frozen version.
Helado de Paila from Ecuador

This creamy, fruity ice may include an egg and cream mixture for extra richness.
Spaghettieis from Germany

A man named Dario Fontanella created spaghettieis in 1969 after squeezing vanilla ice cream through a spätzle press. It gets topped with strawberry sauce and white chocolate stands for the full “spaghetti” effect.
“America’s love for ice cream knows no bounds. Comforting and satisfying as an indulgent treat, ice cream production and consumption grew throughout the COVID pandemic and sales continue to set a blazing pace at grocery, scoop shops and corner stores.”
